12 Perception is a reciprocal action.

Viewers bring to the act of seeing individual sets of conscious and unconscious reactions that affect their response to the visual stimulus put before them. This is the beauty of images, even in their most minimal form – such as a single line. All marks, smudges, pictures, take on a life of their own and accrue meaning under the gaze of a viewer. Viewers activate the thing perceived. You can control the image but not the reaction to it.
